

1 Where do you start?

When selecting the Federal Register Library from the welcome page, this is the landing page, also known as Collection Home page, that you will see first.

Browse by Title from the Library Index:

Expand (+) a title to browse a list of volumes included in that title. Each volume listing is a direct link to the title page of that volume.

NOTE: If you click on the Code of Federal Regulations from the index, you will leave the Federal Register library and enter the CFR library. We have included a link back to the Federal Register in the CFR library, so that you can easily navigate between both libraries.

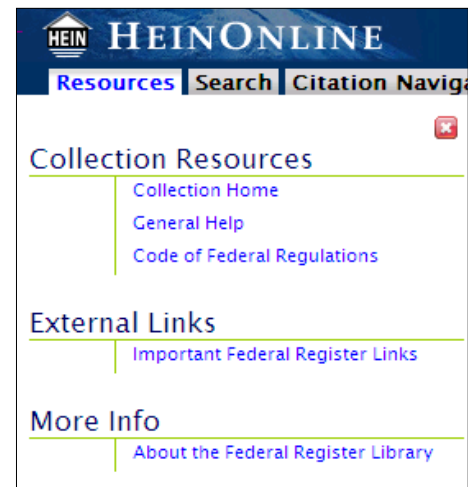

2 Where do you access the most current day in the Federal Register? Are there any research guides? Click on the Resources tab to view additional resources in this library.

Click on External Links to find links to the following content on the GPO Website:

- Most current Federal Register Day
- Most current content in the List of Sections Affected
- Most current content in the Weekly Compilation of Presidential Documents.

There are also links to a Research Guide published by the Law Librarians' Society of Washington, D.C. and an article written by Erwin Griswold in 1934 that led to a decision in Congress to pass legislation that would create the Federal Register.

From the Resources tab, you can also find a link directly to the Code of Federal Regulations. This makes it easy to flip between the CFR and Federal Register libraries when you want to look up citations from one to the other.

3 Do you have a citation to the Federal Register? Use the Citation Navigator

Click on the Citation Navigator tab from the tabbed navigation menu to display the citation tool in the left sidebar. Select the volume of the Federal Register from the drop-down menu, enter the page number and click Get Citation.

Do you only have a date?

Use the bottom tool and select the month/date/year. Click Get Citation and you'll be directed to the first page of the volume.

4 Search by Word or Phrase:

In this example, search for the phrase "customer portfolio margining". To construct a field search, enter the phrase into the first search box, select phrase and full text. To construct an advanced search, insert the field name, in this case text, and use quotations around the phrase. No quotations are necessary for a single term.

8 Search for a word/phrase on a specific Page #:

If you have a specific page number in the Federal Register, you can search for a word or phrase on that specific page by incorporating the page number into a full-text search. For example, enter the page # into the first field, select Phrase and then Full Text from the drop down menu. Then enter the phrase "execution of buy-ins" in the second field, select Phrase and then Full Text from the drop down menu. Click Search. This will return 1 result with a direct link to that page where the term is found.

Full Text	"execution of buy-ins"	AND

Advanced Search

Search for: text:"76486" AND text:"execution of buy-ins"

9 Refine your search:

Conducting a keyword or phrase search in the Federal Register library may display a large number of results if the search terms are broad. Therefore, it is best to refine your search whenever you can. Try using the below attributes to refine your search:

- Add a RANGE OF YEARS to any search by inputting a begin and end year into the date fields. In example #7 from page 2 of this guide, we can add the year 2005 to our search to narrow our results to 1.
- If you have the SPECIFIC DATE, you can add that to your search too, by inputting the Month and Day (i.e. March 11) into the 3rd search box, selecting Phrase and Full Text.

NOTE: If the date (March 11) is referenced in the text of a different day's Federal Register, then you may get more than 1 result. However, the first result should be the most relevant result to your search terms.
